Fund Commentary & Performance Review

The Fund's benchmark KMI-30 index declined by 0.29% during the month of February, 2017. Broker financing and leverage related regulatory action coupled with the the Panamagate hearing in the Supreme Court took centre stage as the stock market declined during the month. Market activity remained lackluster with average volumes of 353 million shares, showing a decline of 20% on a MoM basis. Individual investors remained heavy sellers in the market during the month of February, 2017 with net selling of USD 43 million as opposed to net buying of USD 40 million during January 2017. Three terrorist attacks at various parts of the country in which over 100 people were killed also dampened investor sentiment during the month. Current account deficit for the first seven month reached USD 4.7 billion, up 90% YoY also proved to be a cause of concern for investors.

NIT IEF posted a return of -0.77% for the month of February, 2017 as against a benchmark return of -0.29% showing an underperformance of 0.48%.

Future Outlook

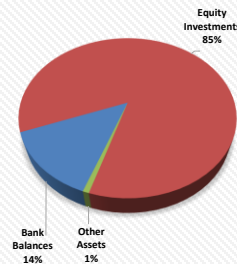

Macroeconomic data including inflation and current account deficit coupled with development on the political front including the outcome of the Panamagate hearing in the Supreme Court will determine the future direction of the market.
